~~tests how techniques and technologies of networked collaboration can support other imaginations of the digital archive DiVersions experiments with the potential of digital archives (of cultural institutions, or cultural~~ heritage) as a site for decolonial and intersectional practice. Inspired by the way 'versioning' functions in networked software tools, seven interactive media installations and this publication explore how online collections can accommodate radically different, and sometimes opposing perspectives ~~"It a reflection speculation on how database tools in structures and protocols can work with and through difference"~~
