

Due to the expiration of copyright protection terms on works produced by authors who died several decades earlier, every year on New Year's Day thousands of works enter the public domain: their content is no longer owned or controlled and becomes a common treasure, available for anyone to freely use for any purpose. Constant, Crids and the Royal Library offer a programme with lectures, discussions, and guided tours on the issues of remixing, digitalisation of knowledge and the public domain.